the streef to meet, the object of his wrath, who he supposed would attempt to kill him, but much to Colone! Donavin's diagnat no such attempt was and chaldren, wince bodies were carried. Donavin has, during the past twenty five years, lived among the public men of the nation, and has been an eye-witness of the most exciting soenes prior to and during the rebellion, and since then has taken part in most of the great political conflicts, so that he has a fund of personal, knowledge in regard to great men and great events which never seems to diminish, no matter how many incidents he draws from it. With his great information he has fine conversations with the Hagiliah poets, from whose writings he can quote in a manner that would make very many professional shounds make very many professional shounds make very many professional elocutionists green with envy, and that adds much to the interest of his talks. He does not "let out" to everybody, however, and only a few choice friends and kindred spirits know how much profit and pleasure may be extracted from an evening's seence with the white-haired newspaper reteran—who by the way, is a bachelor 52 years of age.

Among his most interesting reminiscences are those of John Brown's rait, for he probably knows more of those last days of the here of Osaawattomis than any other man living, having bean an eye-witness to the stirring scenes surrounding the raid on the government arsenal, its subsequent recapture by the federal troops under command of Lee, the full of the proposition and the proposition of the mention of the sound of the case of the cyan and the command of the case of the command of the case of the case of the cyan and the command of the case of the case of the cyan dependent of the case of the case of the cyan depandent of the case of the cyan depandent of
